Young chefs: Sixth form pupils from Folkestone Academy and Lycée Cazin at work in the kitchen

STUDENTS from Boulogne made the short journey across the English Channel to spend a day studying at the Folkestone Academy. Pupils from Lycée Cazin, a specialist sixth form vocational college, visited the school on Wednesday, March 24, to take part in catering and textiles lessons. The aim of the day was to help youngsters from both schools understand different cultures. Young chefs from both sides of the Channel donned their whites and worked together to cook a meal which was served to teachers from both schools. The youngsters all seemed to enjoy themselves. One Folkestone student said: "It was a great experience - my partner taught me the words for different ingredients and dishes in French." It is hoped that the potential benefits that will come from the scheme will include helping pupils to learn a foreign language, as well as sending some of them abroad.
